Under provisions of the Clean Air Act, each State and territory has developed plans to achieve and maintain the clean air standards set by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to protect the public's health and welfare.

These "implementation plans," as they are called, contain the States' blueprints for action to reduce air pollution emissions so that the protective levels are met and will continue to be met. They include regulations and other administrative requirements that the State places on industry and other sources of air pollution emissions.

It is important that the public is aware of the provisions of these implementation plans, and the progress being made in carrying them out. Therefore, EPA has required each State to maintain an up-to-date version of its implementation plan in each air quality region in the State where the plan applies.

The following is a list of the locations, as established by the States, where these files are maintained for public review.

For further information you should contact your State air pollution control agency, or you may contact the appropriate EPA regional office (see page 21).
